Energy Reform Bills Earn Bipartisan Support

Ted Liu, Director of the Department of Business, Economic Development, and Tourism (at left) testifies at a joint hearing of the Consumer Protection and Housing (CPH) and Energy, Environment, and International Affairs (EIA) committees. Committee Chairs Sen. Ron Menor and Sen. J Kalani English are in the foreground; Gov. Linda Lingle and Senior Policy Adviser Linda Smith are in the front row.

Energy reform is in the air at the State Capitol. Many of the initiatives proposed by Sen. J. Kalani English over the years – moving Hawai'i toward energy self-reliance through the use of renewable fuel sources, energy conservation, and "green" building standards in new construction – have earned increased support from the administration and the private sector. "A number of bills are in play this session that provide a realistic framework for energy reform in Hawai'i," Sen. English said. "It's impossible to say at this point which bills will be chosen, but some very progressive ideas are being discussed, and that's good news for the state." At a February 14 joint hearing of the Consumer Protection and Housing (CPH) and Energy, Environment, and International Affairs (EIA) committees, it was clear that the past year's fuel cost increases have forced stakeholders to take a hard look at Hawai'i's dependence on imported fossil fuels. Ted Liu, Director of the Department of Business, Economic Development, and Tourism (DBEDT) spoke of the "rapid rise in utility rates due to the rise in global oil prices" and said "Hawai'i has no choice but to pursue an energy diversification strategy."

Sen. English's energy reform bills, along with others bills he has introduced this session, are listed on page 3 and 4 of this newsletter. In the online edition, the bill numbers are hyperlinked to the text of each bill.

A Message From Kalani

Aloha,

This issue of our newsletter includes a list of bills I have introduced for this legislative session. In the electronic edition, you can click on the bill number and read the document online.

Tracking the progress of bills during the session is a fascinating look at the way government works. At its best, the system ensures that no bill can become a law until it has been reviewed carefully -- and citizens have made their voices heard.

J. Kalani English

Author Patricia Grace and Sen. English had an opportunity to discuss their shared interest in Pacific Island culture when they met at the Capitol Feb. 7. Sen. English has introduced several measures over the years to preserve Hawaiian language and culture. SB3160, introduced this session, requires that State documents include both state languages, with the Hawaiian language placed above English translation, and establishes a Hawaiian language interim task force.

The Oxford Companion to New Zealand Literature says Patricia Grace “has gained wide recognition as a key figure in the emergence of Maori fiction in English since the 1970’s... Her work, expressive of Maori consciousness and values, is distinguished also for the variety of Maori people and ways of life it portrays and for its resourceful versatility of style and narrative and descriptive technique.”

Sen. English presented Ms. Grace with a Senate certificate that honored her for “her contributions to contemporary literature and the global community.”

A delegation of educators from the Hawaii State Teachers Association came to the Capitol Feb. 10 to alert lawmakers to the impact on their schools of the state’s new Weighted Student Formula, which allocates dollars directly to schools on a per-pupil basis. In practice, the formula takes funds away from some rural schools, especially on Moloka’i and Lana’i. The HSTA group met with Sen. English and the House and Senate Education chairs, Rep. Roy Takumi and Sen. Norman Sakamoto. From left to right: Steve Harman, Jeanine Tsuchiya, Rod Sugamit, Eric Nagamine, Sen. English, Carlo Marchetti, Bob Underwood, Weldon Wichman, and Petra Rose.

Free Tax Preparation Assistance Offered for Moloka’i
